

The Rental Exchange

Questions and Answers

Background.

Big Issue Invest (BII) part of The Big Issue Group and Experian have partnered to tackle the financial, digital and social exclusion challenges faced by social housing tenants in the UK.

BII and Experian will be working with housing associations, local authorities and key stakeholders across the public, private and voluntary sectors to collect up-to-date rental payment information on tenants living in social housing and feeding this data into the Experian Rental Exchange.

The impact of Welfare Reform and the continued economic challenges we face in the UK make this initiative more relevant than ever before. However, data is required en masse to truly make this work. The more data that starts coming into the Rental Exchange, the sooner we can work towards building tenants credit scores and ultimately enable access to more affordable credit. Our aim is that data will start to be incorporated into credit scoring in 2015.

Contents.

- 1. An introduction to Rental Exchange and why it's important.
- 2. Who is Rental Exchange aimed at and how does it work?
- 3. The benefits for tenants and data protection.
- 4. A closer look at the data – what is it and how will it be used.
- 5. What are the long-term implications of Rental Exchange for tenants and housing associations?
- 6. Missed rental payments and credit histories.
- 7. The relationship between Experian and Big Issue Invest (BII).

What is the Rental Exchange?

The Rental Exchange is a 'ring-fenced' secure database which holds rental payment information. It has been discussed with the Information Commissioner's Office to ensure it complies with the letter and spirit of the Data Protection Act 1998.

The information will allow tenants with a 'thin file' - a history of little or no credit - to build a credit score. The database can be accessed by lenders and other service providers when a tenant applies for a loan or service that requires a credit check or proof of identity, something that is becoming common-place for both private and public sector transactions.

Why has it been set up?

Millions of social housing tenants in the UK face financial, digital and social exclusion. One major cause of this is an information gap in their credit history which can exclude low-income people from affordable credit. They are more likely to be declined or pay a higher price for credit and other basic goods and services. Addressing this has been a key agenda for BII and a number of like-minded organisations for several years. The Rental Exchange supports BII's mission is to give people 'a hand up, not a hand out'.

What is a credit file and why is it important?

Anyone who is over 18 and has ever taken out credit is likely to have a credit report, held by a Credit Reference Agency. Experian is the world's leading CRA. It's a personal history of the credit an individual has had, including mortgages, credit cards and even mobile phone contractor utility bills.

Many social housing tenants have a 'thin file'. This means there is very little information about an individual's financial history or circumstances – making it hard to prove identity or reliability as a payer and access benefits and services that mainstream society has come to regard as 'the norm'. The Rental Exchange will open up new channels and services to social housing tenants, giving fairer access without the time-consuming need to provide paper-based evidence of identity or financial commitments.

For more information on what a credit report is and what sort of information is on there, visit:

experian.co.uk/consumer/what-is-a-credit-report.html

Who will benefit from it?

Initially, the Rental Exchange focused on supporting tenants in social housing, where the need is greatest. The scheme is now supporting the wider and expanding rental market in the UK – which includes other groups who may be financially excluded in a similar way. Experian will provide this service to private landlords and individuals to help everyone in rented accommodation build their credit profile, and help landlords better understand their tenants and to identify and help those under financial stress.

How will it work?

While information about mortgage payments is included on credit reports, rent payment information currently isn't. This means that tenants who make their rent payments on time are unable to have this positive information registered on their credit report. The more positive information on a credit report, the more likely an individual is to access the best deals for credit, goods and services, and be able to prove their identity.

Social housing providers will provide a regular feed of accurate and up-to-date payment data about tenants' rent payment performance into the Rental Exchange. The Rental Exchange will offer a secure and compliant way to include a tenant's payment history in their credit file, strengthening their credit history and helping them qualify for a greater range and lower-cost payment plans. The data will be accessed when the tenant applies for goods or services where a credit or identity check is made through an organisation using Experian's database.

Experian processes significantly more transactions of this kind in the UK than any other organisation, giving the tenant the best chance of their data being available to support their application.

When the tenant makes an application they are notified that a credit check will be made, as would any consumer when they go to purchase certain goods or services. For example, this could extend to tenants having the option of better tariffs on their utilities' bill based on their credit file. This enhanced view of repayment history will improve the ability of lenders to treat all customers fairly, with more accurate lending decisions based on a more complete understanding of the financial situation of the individual, as is increasingly required by regulators.

How will it benefit tenants?

The Rental Exchange will enable tenants to build a positive credit history and 'online' proof of identity – increasingly important when applying, for example, for goods and services such as, a utility supplier, a mobile phone provider or when online shopping.

When will tenants start to see the benefits?

The more data that starts coming into the Rental Exchange, the sooner we can work towards building tenants' credit scores and ultimately enable access to more affordable credit. Our aim is that data will start to become used in credit applications and assessments in 2015. Tenants are being provided with full information and support services to explain how credit reports are used via their landlord.

What about data protection?

Any access to the data will comply with the requirements of the Data Protection Act 1998 (DPA). Experian and BII have been in discussion with the Information Commissioner's Office (ICO) to ensure sharing of rental payments is fully compliant and fair to the tenant. The unequivocal benefit to tenants is recognised by DPA 'legitimate interests' provisions (DPA 1998 Sch2 para 6). The Rental Exchange is based on protecting tenants' data while at the same time enabling them to ensure organisations can use this data to support their application.

The ICO recognise that tackling social, financial and digital exclusion issues through enabling tenants to use their information in a way that helps them is something that should be supported, subject to tenants being provided with a very clear explanation of how this will benefit them.

Who will be able to see rental data and how will it be used?

Access to data is controlled in accordance with the Data Protection Act 1998, allowing access only to companies you have granted data access to, or if there is a legal requirement to do so, this data can be made available to any prospective credit enquirer participating in Experian's credit data sharing scheme as is currently the norm for other consumers.

Data will also be made available to landlords and organisations undertaking property management and tenant referencing activities on behalf of landlords, again with the tenant being notified of this.

Will rental data be included on people's credit reports?

Yes, as lenders will be able to use rental data to help make decisions about credit, tenants will see this data when they access their credit report.

Experian's consumer website already shows the type of information provided to consumers:

experian.co.uk/consumer/credit-reports-explained.html

What will be the process for dealing with data disputes?

We will help tenants resolve any disputes in the same way we do for other types of data. If a tenant contacts their social housing provider or Experian to report a problem, Experian mark the data as under dispute while we investigate with the provider.

This process will be made clear to tenants when their social housing provider chooses to join the Rental Exchange. Marking data as disputed means that any organisation looking at this data must make further enquiries to ensure any decisions they make reflects the tenant is disputing the accuracy of this information. This is consistent with the requirements of the Data Protection Act 1998.

Will the data be shared with third parties for marketing purposes?

No, we will not share any personal data with any third parties for marketing purposes.

Why should organisations take part?

The social housing providers that we have spoken to so far will take part in the scheme principally to assist their tenants, to help them with the challenges they face in everyday life, such as getting a better tariff for a bill, attaining affordable credit when they need a loan, or proving their identity.

Which social housing providers are involved?

We are currently in discussions with over 150 housing organisations across the UK representing over 50% of all social renters and are pro-actively going out to the market seeking new partners to support this initiative. It is a long term plan to have the full support of all social housing providers.

Will missed rental payments stop people accessing affordable credit or renting a home?

For the majority of people it's the opposite, as it will help prove that they meet this regular and important financial commitment. Most lenders will ask a consumer about their outgoings to understand their situation but in the case of tenants, lenders and tenants are currently unable to verify commitments and performance history without going back to their housing provider. So in effect the lender and tenant can now benefit from real-time transactions on accurate, objective information. This will support more responsible borrowing and lending and help people avoid becoming over-indebted.

If a tenant is unable to pay their rent, it is unlikely they are suitable for a loan or other payment agreement. For social housing providers, it will help identify those tenants who are financially vulnerable and enable them to provide an appropriate treatment strategy to help get them 'back on track'.

“We are currently in discussions with over 150 housing organisations across the UK representing over 50% of all social renters and are proactively going out to the market seeking new partners to support this initiative.”

Will social housing tenants with a record of missed rent payments in the past be blocked from renting with another social provider?

Rental payment history should not affect who a social housing provider provides housing to as it is their responsibility to provide affordable housing to those who need it most. However, Experian and BII are not responsible for how a social housing provider uses this data.

The primary aim of the Rental Exchange and its social housing provider partners is to support individuals and help them to build a positive credit report. Rental payment history will provide social housing providers with a better understanding of tenants' financial situations to identify and support vulnerable individuals and families under financial stress.

Will people whose rent, or part rent, is paid for by the government have their credit histories affected when payment of rent is late through no fault of their own?

No, if the rent payment is made to the landlord directly by a government agency those payments do not count towards the payment status of a tenant.

Will social housing providers be able to see a tenant's credit history data?

Organisations can only access credit history data under limited circumstances: We control access to consumer data in accordance with the Data Protection Act 1998, allowing access only to companies you have granted data access to, or if there is a legal requirement to do so. Currently, social housing providers sometimes use credit reference agency data to avoid tenancy fraud and to identify how to appropriately meet their tenants needs.

What is the relationship between Experian and BII?

The innovative concept of sharing rental data to enable social housing tenants' better access to credit and mainstream services was developed by BII several years ago. BII initiated a competitive and transparent tender process for a partner to create and responsibly manage the Rental Exchange for the better of society.

Experian was selected in 2012 as the preferred supplier. As well as being the leading global information service's company, providing data and analytical tools to clients around the world, Experian has a long history of corporate social responsibility.

Visit our website to find out more:

experian.co.uk responsibilities/corporate-responsibility/index.html

Are there other ways in which BII supports financial inclusion for tenants?

BII is supportive of affordable lending organisations, such as credit unions and community development finance institutions. It provides finance for these organisations to scale-up their activities, most recently investing in Moneyline an organisation providing affordable loans in the NorthWest and Wales. The majority of their clients are social housing tenants. The Rental Exchange compliments this wider work, and we are engaging with these organisations as a key stakeholder.

If you have a question that has not been answered here or would like to know more about the Rental Exchange, please email:

John@bigissueinvest.com or

Vicky.mcnab@uk.experian.com

and we will come back to you as soon as possible.